

What is the meaning of life? This is a question which has been asked by people for centuries. Human beings are mortal and because of this, they are interested in knowing where their existence leaves off. The phrase "kal ho na ho" means "everything will happen". This is a blog post that talks about the meaning of life up to this point which is what the title reflects. It talks about how throughout time, everyone has had different answers to what that answer may be but there isn't one person who can say definitively what it might be. The article also discusses how people have attempted to find an answer through science but have still not come up with anything conclusive. It talks about how philosophers have always asked themselves the question because it's always been about what could be done with their lives. It also discusses ideas of reincarnation and how it is just as plausible as believing in God because there are no physical proof to back up either claim. It believes that the answer to the meaning of life is just something that people can accept or reject. They can live their lives doing whatever they choose without any real reason behind it all other than for plain enjoyment. The author believes that everyone should take time out to ask themselves about their own lives and why they do what they do every day instead of just running through life blindly. This is what they believe in because in the end, that's what is truly important. It has an about the author section that states that is part of many different fields of study. It was written by David Schwartzman, who is said to be interested in the meaning of life and how society views it. He lives in Brooklyn with his wife and children. He also has a local dog named Libby who he loves very much.
